

A scientist checks a sample on the catwalk and wave guide leading to centrally-suspended triangular support platform.

To assist atmospheric physicists, astronomers and other qualified scientists studying outer space, the Arecibo Ionospheric Observatory makes available its 2.5 million watt transmitter and 1,000-foot diameter reflector throughout the year.

The radar-radio telescope, whose primary function is the radar study of the earth's ionosphere, was conceived and designed by Professor William E. Gordon of the Cornell University School of Electrical Engineering.

After 3½ years of construction on 125 acres of mountainous countryside in Puerto Rico, the $9.3 million project was opened on November 1, 1963.

The largest such device in the world, it functions both through transmission of pulsed signals (radar) and listening to energy emitted by spatial radio sources (radio).

Operated by the University under a research contract with the Air Force Office of Scientific Research, the telescope is concurrently operating three subprograms dealing with outer space.

The primary program studies the ionosphere, measuring the electron density, temperature and influence on the earth's magnetic field of that region several hundred to several thousand miles high. Such studies are carried out to help scientists understand the influence of the ionosphere on earth's weather and communications.

The second program is planetary radar studies, where more precise recordings of radio echoes help determine orbits of planets and the moon. At the same time, surface contours can be measured in areas as small as 12 miles in diameter.

The third program is radio astronomy, where to date more than 3,000 radio sources have been located in space, while only 100 or so have been optically identified.

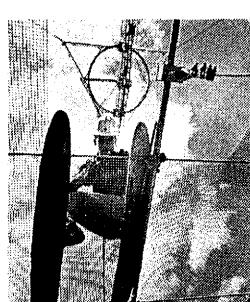

Recent discovery of spaced pulsations of regular occurrence is only one of the astronomical phenomena which the unit is capable of revealing.

Able to operate both day and night, in any weather, the telescope is capable of observing through a range of the electromagnetic spectrum far wider than the relatively narrow band of visible light to which current optical instruments are limited.

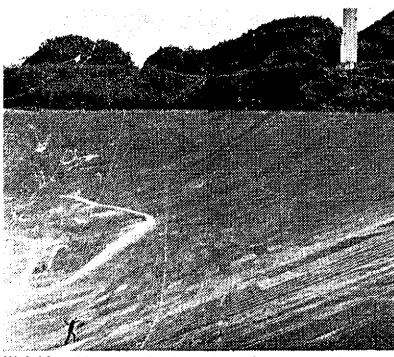

In this capacity, the "Big Ear" listens billions of light-years into space to seek what is past the known limits of the universe.

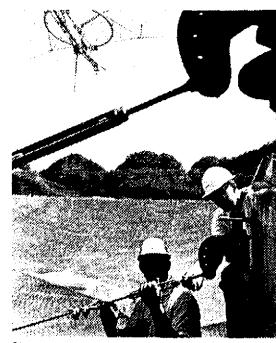

A workman stands on an anchor block unit supporting one of the three towers which suspend the triangular platform.

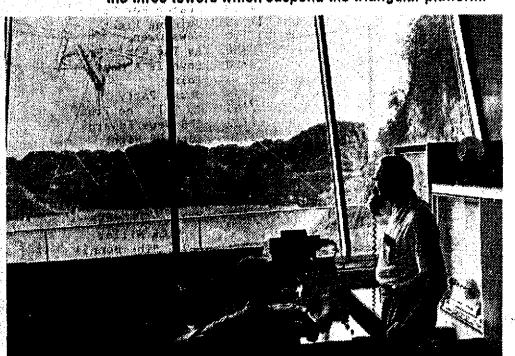

To properly maintain the curvature of the half-inch square wire mesh reflector, workmen move over its surface on water skis to distribute their weight.

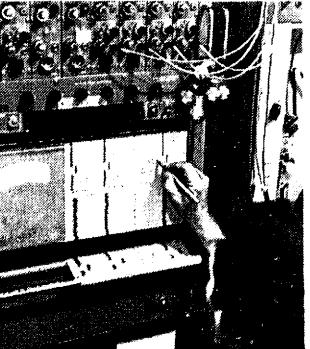

Weighing 207 tons, the 1,000-foot diameter bowl-shaped reflector is examined by a workman for damage or litter.

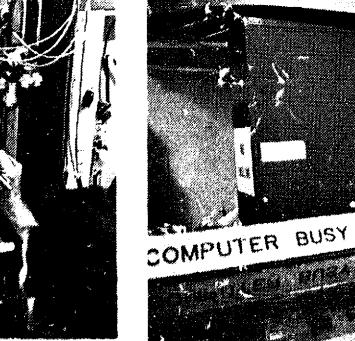

Two staff members check the linkage on the mesh-supporting cables above the reflector.

From the control room above the reflector, operators are in communication with men working in the antenna structure high above

A staff member makes notes on computerized "listenings."

NEW YORK - (NEA)-For most of Mickey Mantle's 18 seasons with the Yankees, he has been wreathed in lilac prose. His ability to smack and stalk a baseball has been exalted. He has been perilously close to being deified.

By IRA BERKOW

Traffic cops, neighborhood grocers with long credit lists and garbage collectors have contributed as much to society as Mickey Mantle. But there are few switch-hitters among them. And they don't an exception to the between-get the same kind of press at games interview ban this tention.

"The press," Mantle said the other day, "has been great to me. Without them, prob-ably no one would ever have heard of me. Sure, I have a responsibility to the press. They made me what I am. I owe everything to them."

Mantle, however, has his own notion of what responsi-bility means. His obligations to the press are second in priority to his teammates. Mantle admits, though, that he is sometimes "moody" with re-

His moods have included walking away in the middle of interviews.

When Mantle went five-forfive, including two homers. in the first game of a doubleheader, 30 reporters at Yankee Stadium stampeded to the Yankee locker room after the game to see him.

He refused them an audience outside the dressing room door. A Yankee assistant publicity director and then Yankee public relations director and vice president, Bob Fishel, failed to flush him out of the warm womb of the clubhouse, as one reporter wrote. Lee MacPhail, executive vice president and general manager was sum-moned. Shortly, Mantle appeared. Some reporters turned their backs. "It's manager Ralph Houk's rule that no interviews are granted between games," said Mantle. "I was just respecting the rule. Besides, none of the other 24 players on the team were asked to go out. Why should I be something special? If I went out, it would seem like I was above and apart from the rest of the fellas. These are the guys I want to like and respect me.

They are the ones who count." Houk said, "We had no idea there was such commotion outside the door. When Mac-Phail told me, we went over to Mickey and said we'd make games interview ban this time. Mickey said, 'Aw, hell, I don't have anything to say. I just got some hits today, that's all.' But we convinced

"I didn't have anything to say and the reporters didn't have anything to ask," said Mantle, "Do you know what the first question was? It was, 'The guy you hit your first homer off of struck you out four times the last time you faced him. What do you think of that?'

"I almost turned around and walked back in the club-

"I get along with most of the writers. But there are two in New York I don't have much to do with. Usually they stand on the outside when a group of reporters is around me. Then they'll pop in with something that irritates me. That makes me freeze up."

There was ice in his smile. But on a hot summer day in the Bronx, that kind of coolness isn't what a guy's looking for.

had an awful dream last night. Usually, I can't remember much of the details of a dream. I didn't sleep well. Guess I am like a hound dog baying at a full moon. After a couple of hours of sleep, I woke up and could not go back to sleep. I got up, found a magazine, propped two pillows back of my head and started reading.

It was after I read myself to sleep that I had the dream. I heard a knock on the front door and upon answering it found a bedraggled 19-year-old boy sitting on the edge of the porch. He seemed mild mannered enough and not worried about his situation which was as follows: His parents lived in Des Moines, Iowa. (I had been listening to that radio station before going to sleep). He was without funds. When questioned he seemed "bla." He had not finished high school, had wandered south looking for work, was dirty, and needed a haircut.

I was afraid of him, afraid of bringing him into the house and putting him to bed. In the old days I could have told him to sleep in the barn, but how is a person going to sleep on baled hay stuffed to the roof? I was afraid that he might kill the wife and me after we went back to sleep. (Incidentally, that is the reason for not picking up hitchhikers on the highway). I thought of taking him in the car to a motel for the night with the idea that I might help him the next morning. However, I woke up at about that stage of the dream.

Today, I ask myself if I have absorbed some of the hysteria which is sweeping our country. Instead of dreaming about the click of fruit jars which indicates that the tops have sealed on canned vegetables, or dreaming about winning a blue ribbon with one of my horses at a horse show, or about getting my winter's hay in the barn without a drop of rain on it, I have to become involved with all the violence which is disrupting the nation.

Not all the cause for anxiety about the "generation gap" takes place in the larger cities. Ihardly know how to talk to high school dropouts whose hair hangs almost to their shoulders, who show me two pistols hidden under a truck seat, and who dash up and down the road burning rubber on their rear wheels, with a short exhaust pipe giving out with a roaring

B52 Bombers Call Him, Tomorrow Strike Cong Near Saigon

By ROBERT D. OHMAN Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - American B52 bombers pounded Viet Cong inflitration routes with 150 tons of bombs today while ground forces searched for rocket firing sites around the perimeters of

The rolling thunder of 500-pound bombs was clearly heard: in the capital as the bombers made two strikes about 20 miles northwest of the city. The ground forces fanned out within the enemy's seven-mile rocket range of Saigon.

U.S. officials said the allied sweeps around Salgon have turned up more Russian-made 122 mm rockets than have been fired at the city. Since Jan. 29, they said, about 267 rockets have hit in or near Saigon, and in the same period allied soldiers found 304 of the six-foot rockets in enemy ammunition

Twenty enemy mortar rounds fell along the Kinh Doi Canal on the southern fringe of Saigon, wounding two policemen and six South Vietnamese civilians.

About 60 Chinese -made 107mm rockets struck the big Blen Hoa airbase 15 miles north of Saigon, but U.S. spokesmen said they inflicted no casualties or damage.

In the northern provinces, a Viet Cong raiding party entered the Vinh, the refugee camp 15 miles south of Da Nang and abducted 60 persons after setting fire to 20 tents. A U.S. Marine spokesman said the civilians presumably would be used as a labor force. Enemy gunners also zeroed in on supply points and an airport. The U.S. Marine command reported that twenty-two 122mm rockets hit the sprawling supply base northwest of Da Nang, inflicting light to moderate damage. Fifty artillery rounds inflicted light damage on the Cua Viet supply point six miles below the demilitarized zone. One civilian was killed and 20 others were wounded when 32 mortar rounds slammed into the Quang Ngai City airport, 50 miles south of Da Nang. After five weeks of bombardment, the center of Saigon has not been hit by rockets since Tuesday despite threats broadcast by North Vietnam's official news agency that the Viet Cong will continue rocket attacks on the capital and the northern
